

What Is Mediation ?

Mediation is a voluntary process that offers parties an opportunity and environment to discuss issues of communication, separation, child custody, support and visitation, alimony, debt, division of property and other familial matters. Parties will both be able to share their views and have an opportunity to address important issues in a cooperative and constructive way. Our aim is to provide the collaborative environment in which parties can creatively address their needs and those of their children and assist in drafting and negotiating agreements to guide future relations.

Is Mediation Confidential?

Yes! All matters discussed and disclosed are protected by the Court's policy of confidentiality. With the exception of the actual written agreement, nothing said or disclosed in mediation is allowed in court, and mediators may not testify. The only exceptions are threats made by a party or alleged child abuse or neglect.

Who participates in mediation?

- ❖ Parents and/or custodial adults.
- ❖ Attorneys with both parties consenting.
- ❖ Mediator (s).

Who are the mediators ?

Mediators are extensively trained Court mediators who help you to identify issues, clarify needs and consider options that help you to come to an agreement. Mediators are neutral and do not give advice or render decisions.

Instead, they facilitate a positive discussion and provide for an atmosphere that helps to consider both parties' realistic needs and the interests of their children.

How Can Mediation Help ?

Mediation is a unique opportunity to speak with professionals about the family, to express concerns, and to resolve your case without the emotional and financial cost of going to trial. Mediation removes the unpredictability of trial and allows parties to spend the necessary time to be creative in their problem solving well beyond the ability of a Judge. In this manner, mediation helps families heal and rebuild their lives under civil terms.

What to expect at mediation.

The mediators lead a structured conversation about the issues in the case. The mediators will speak with the parties jointly and separately and will ask each party to document all issues involving financial terms. Sessions are usually 2 hours long and a case generally takes 3-4 sessions to reach conclusion.

What to expect after mediation.

If an agreement is reached, the mediator will draft the Agreement. The Family Program Branch Chief then reviews the Agreement before it is submitted to parties for review. Clients are encouraged to request attorney review as well. Once the parties approve the final draft, the agreement may be signed and submitted to the judge if it is a court case. Mediation agreements may also be merged into Court Orders. If an agreement is not reached, court-referred parties will return to the court process for trial.
