President Abraham Lincoln abolishes the Circuit Court due to perceived Southern loyalties of the sitting judges. The new court was composed of four judges selected based on their political loyalties to the United States.